BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Russia Returns to International Grain Market

As of July 1, 2011, Russia will lift its nearly 1-year-long ban on grain imports that was imposed in August 2010 following Russia's wheat drought that caused a substantial increase in global grain prices. The move is largely motivated by Russia's agricultural potential and the fact that Russia is the world's largest grain producer.

France Signs $4 Billion Deal to Open Market

The confederation North-Caucasus region is about to receive $4 billion from Russian and international Government. At the meeting of President Medvedev and Foreign ministers, Russia signed a deal a $1.2 billion, mostly in soft loans, to back infrastructure projects in the troubled region. This will allow the CIS cooperation under the Joint forum President Medvedev as well as the joint political cooperation under Russia and France.

immigrants live in Russia per- manently, a second accord- ing to the latest figures from the United Nations. Low-skilled, often unen- trenched workers, many of them naturalized, are at risk of deportation. And the economic crisis has made the situation much harder. For many, the only way out of poverty is to migrate. The problem is that many of these immigrants are not able to support their families, and now face a new threat: deportation.

One measure under consid-eration from the authorities.

No one less than 40 years old has lived in a stable home for the same year of its construction. In the past, the authorities have been lenient, issuing permits for them to live in the house even if it has been abandoned.

The government has pledged to protect native peoples, bringing in ambulance doctors to the most remote area of the country.

A helicopter soars over the tundra. Empty, lifeless, the tundra stretches for miles in all directions. The snow is almost completely black, except for the occasional patch of snow where the sun has melted it. The ground is frozen, with barely any vegetation, except for the occasional clump of grass.

Despite the country's demo- cratic crisis, there is widespread support among immigrants for liberal immigration policies, largely due to local social movements.

The result is that they are often in a desperate situation, unsure of what to do next. They may turn to the police for help, but the police are often unhelpful. They may also turn to the courts, but the courts are often unresponsive.

Elya Baskin, now 61, seized the opportunity. “When I first got to Los Angeles, I was introduced to Paul Mazursky, who was a great actor...”

Baskin came to Hollywood in 1979 when Arsenin was in the middle of a Cold War with the Soviet Union. “It was a huge well-supported military machine,” said the actor. “When Soviet leaders began loosening their grip, the big prison opened its doors and the empire was swept away, you could see it in your country.”

Baskin, now 61, said he was open to going in the search for work. “I went to Los Angeles with an open mind and was surprised that they wanted to see the Russian actor.”

And so began a steady acting career. “When auditioning for my first Hollywood film, I didn’t have any support,” said Baskin. “I was there on my own, and it was a very difficult time for me.”

But he did have a support network. “My family was always there for me, and they helped me to overcome the challenges of being a Russian actor in Hollywood.”

With the help of his family and friends, Baskin was able to overcome the challenges of being a Russian actor in Hollywood. “My family was always there for me, and they helped me to overcome the challenges of being a Russian actor in Hollywood.”
